Je's 1/24 note on filing concludes with the noats of a simple solution for the walking Hermes. Mine crawls slowly, but short of clamping it to the very small, lightweight typewriter table I have to us for space limitations, leaving a fine one unused, I'd welcome the secret. I think much of my trouble with it, not great, just a contributing factor in very bad typing, comes from shifting. I'm vigorous with it as with punching when I get wound up. On the files, I'm resolved to chaos. There was a time when I put slips in the various files and notes on a card file, but it got to be too much. Then I forget. Today, for example, I wanted to get ~~xxxxx~~ comes I filed of the stories on the Romero(Jose Luis) French book on the JFK assassination. Can't. Lesar says both sides in current Computers, with one of the more paranoid CTIA nuts saying it is a fake. I agree or I'd have less trouble finding. There is real steam behind it, so I suspect SDECE again. Files again:Consider that I have more than 2,000 pages of unread CDs, with all those names, the real reason they are unread. HW 1/29/73
